Jerry-

I'm putting you on notice that the child is refusing to go to Mother's home as court ordered so you can inform your client and now have him follow court orders (see attachment). He cannot now claim that he does not know what is going on or he thought Justin was at Mother's home. Also, Justin cannot make another false statement at court that he was at Mother's home during her parenting time. And if Mother does not get her parenting time this weekend, we fully expect a makeup weekend next week.

Father is required to make sure Justin is at Mother's house. The court order obligates him. Justin is supposed to be there this weekend. I am trying to avoid another petition for contempt.

Please confirm Justin will be going to Mother's home ASAP and that the missed night will be made up next weekend.

Yvette, my client was not ordered to affirmatively do anything to facilitate the visits. He is not discouraging his son from complying with the order. The only one actively discouraging Justin from visiting his mother is your client. I guess she can try to have him detained as a juvenile offender. Of course, by the time his hearing reaches the juvenile court, he will be an adult and the juvenile court will lose jurisdiction. As you know, Justin is an intelligent, independent young man and makes his own decisions. He understands the consequences. I'm told your client has been banned from Miami High School as a result of her conduct and can not even go to his football games. She has publicly slandered the judge, my client and her son. My guess is she will never have a relationship with her son unless she changes her attitude, but I'm sure she could care less about my opinions. Jerry DeRose

He is so awful. Nothing he says is true. I go to MHS every day to take Gavin. And Doug and I went to open house to meet all the teachers.

He just gets to say and do whatever he wants. Always.

I cannot believe this guy...

From the beginning we've been saying father isn't encouraging visitation... and his defense is that he isn't discouraging it. No one is in contempt and then court orders mean nothing.

"As you know, Justin is an intelligent, independent young man and makes his own decisions. He understands the consequences."

So it's ok for "intelligent, independent" young men to defy a court order? It's ok for him to disregard a judge's order because "he knows the consequences"?

Since when does an attorney get away with excusing his client defying a court order because he's "intelligent and independent"?

And the rest of the shit he included is deflection. He can talk about your behavior and provide his ridiculous opinions and advice later. The topic is the court order and he should stick to it.
